Chapter 1 by Ashley

For me purple represents power, luxury, magic, royalty, wisdom, creativity, mystery, and independence. Purple is more of a serious and manners color.

Chapter 2 by SaintSayaka

That's why I dressed in it. Bathed in it. Spoke in lilac undertones. I was as much purple as the mountains in folktales or the wings of a fairy. From far and wide, purple sacrifices were brought to my feet by subservient beings - my loyal subjects, all eager to please their queen.

Until I was tainted red.

Chapter 3 by SaintSayaka

Upon the death of my husband, I was unanimously declared ruler of the domain. I had never really loved him. We were bound together by necessity - an arranged marriage that soothed relations between the nation of my birth and his own. And now I was their queen, the head of a foreign ship! It took me for quite the spin.

Still, I was happy. I was welcome to the open arms of my husband's embassy, and his people, too. Maybe that's why I'm still here.

That kingdom to the North had been unnecessarily belligerent with us at every given opportunity. Spitting on our offerings. Denying our invitations to festivals. Rejecting our peace and companionship at every turn. Perhaps they needed to be taught manners.

I sent my men marching into war with the best of intentions. My commands to them were periwinkle and pleading, and nobody could accuse me of not having the best in mind for the kingdom. I was right, after all. A kingdom so rude to us was planning something. Could turn at any minute. My people wore mulberry on their chests, proud that I was their leader.
